THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1901
THE CHIEF END OF A STATESMAN.

There appeared in the JOURNAL yesterday morning extracts taken from a speech made by Hon. Francis G. Newlands before the House of Representatives upon irrigation in the arid west.

The gentleman gave to his remarks upon this important subject a wider range than is usual upon like subjects, the object in view by so doing it is just to presume is to direct more fully the attention of the House to a matter that demands public attention equal to the most important matters of an internal nature before Congress.

An additional cause for the gentleman's extended remarks upon the subject is his superior knowledge upon a matter, that includes more than the average Congressman has learned from his dreams, a practical farming in countries where the rains and snows of winter can be stored and warmed to produce abundant crops in summer, which will be superior to anything in a crop line produced where it is deemed that superior advantages exist, through rains that fall in season to produce crops and which too often fall in and out of season to their destruction.

When Mr. Newlands had directed attention to the more special reasons and matters that exist in favor of action by Congress at this time and in the future to aid in impounding water for irrigation he presented for consideration by the House the more broad principle included in the work, which is a principle that is entitled to the best thought and consideration Congress is capable of giving to the subject included, as it is of the highest public utility.

A Statesman has ever in view the public good. Please do not include in the term "Statesman" those who prowl about the treasury clothed in a Subsidy bill. The highest public good that can be secured to a people is happiness, which includes prosperity to the individual citizen. Happiness and prosperity are not possible unless connected with a happy home.

The object to be secured by a Statesman is, happy homes or the prosperity of the State, which cannot be maintained in the absence of happy homes.

The more plentiful happy homes are in the country the more prosperous will be the people who occupy these homes. The means to secure homes must be provided before happiness can come to homes, which truth is the beginning and, it may be said, the end of national prosperity and independence.

As things are before Congress, who among its members is entitled to outrank all other members as a statesman? If Francis G. Newlands is not the man, while he is contending to provide means for happy homes through additional facilities to provide increased irrigation?

The size of the irrigation question is larger than most of us think it is, when we are discussing the number of bushels of wheat per acre that can be produced upon a sagebrush tract with water sufficient to irrigate it properly. It does not occur to us when engaged in discussing a sugar beet problem connected with an acre of Nevada's best land for sugar beet growth and sugar property development, that the greatest problem that is ever up for solution by the statesman is included, which is the happy home connected with the problem.

The size of the question is not ascertained from what has been said. It is only ascertained that the problem of a happy home is ever before the statesman for his solution and that he is continually engaged in its solution. The solution of the question has engaged a world from the beginning, and at this time directed by an advanced civilization, as the world is pleased to term it, mankind is more engaged in its solution than at any time preceding the present.

Whoever believes that there is no more in the irrigation problem than the storage of water to produce crops, has not given to the subject the thought he is capable of giving it, as it has in it the grandest object to be secured that has occupied the human mind connected with the material progress and happiness of man.

When we know that the chief question before a statesman for his solution at all times is a discovery, connected with all circumstances, of the means to provide and maintain happy homes, the efforts of our Congressman in his character as statesman to procure the appropriation to build dams to secure water to irrigate more land upon which to make homes, will be better understood.

Irrigation Arguments.

Mr. Hill.—I am in favor of the development of wealth by individual effort.

Mr. Newlands.—The gentleman proposes to turn over the land to the State. Does the gentleman know that every reservoir site necessary for the reclamation of the arid lands adjacent to these rivers in Nevada is in California? Will not the gentleman present to Nevada a gold brick when he presents to her the arid lands within her boundaries without giving her the California mountain lands in which her streams have their sources and without which the conservation of their flood waters is impossible?

Mr. Newlands then added the following questions to Mr. Cannon:

Now, I ask the gentleman whether he is willing to cede to Nevada not only the lands of Nevada, but the entire eastern slope of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, whose streams are tributaries thereto.

Mr. Cannon.—If the Federal courts have not already jurisdiction, I would give them jurisdiction to legislate and determine the interests of Nevada and California. But, far better than that, I should like to pursue such a policy as would make Nevada with her 40,000 people, a respectable county in the State of California.

Mr. Newlands.—The policy that the gentleman pursues will result in Nevada remaining a State of 40,000 people. The contraction of the energies of that State and the contraction of the population of that State are entirely due to the policy inaugurated by the party to which the gentleman belongs, and which he sustains.

We propose to stand by our platform. The gentleman proposes to repudiate his. Now, the gentleman amplified on it in his previous speech, stating that the very purpose of this platform was to secure the support of those thirteen States or more in the arid land region of whose contracted population he complains. I ask if that was the purpose?

Mr. Cannon.—I was not in the convention that adopted the platform, nor was I in your convention. In my judgment the pledge of the platform would be substantially the settlement by Congress by the legislation I have indicated. If it would not be, then I would not stand by that plank in the platform.

Mr. Newlands.—I am glad to have so much candor from the gentleman. The gentleman has referred in terms of ridicule to the letter he received from an Illinois constituent asking for legislation on this matter. He has alluded to him as a piano dealer, a man connected with trade and commerce. I ask the gentleman whether he does not know that the Board of Trade of the city of Chicago sent leading representatives to the irrigation congress, held in Chicago last November, and that they were among the most active men in support of the policy for the reclamation of the arid lands and the building up of a domestic empire, and whether the merchants and manufacturers of Chicago do not feel that the trade interests of Chicago would be benefited thereby. The Board of Trade of St. Louis also was represented in that convention. Does not the gentleman believe that they feel that they are personally interested in the building up of this country west of them, the increase of its population, its wealth and its trade?

Mr. Cannon.—Now, in reply to the gentleman's question, if he desires it, I will say that the Chicago Board of Trade regulates its own action. So with St. Louis.

Mr. Newlands.—I want to ask the gentleman if he will favor giving the House a day or two for the consideration of a comprehensive plan under which the three features of disposing of this question can be considered—one, the question of the disposition, which the gentleman favors, namely, the cession to the States; another, an appropriation of public funds out of the General Treasury for the conservation of water as a matter of general public improvement, without reference to compensation for this great work; another, simply the bill reported by the Irrigation Committee, which provides that the Government shall do the work in the interest of the entire people, using the moneys received from the sale of the public lands of that region for construction, receiving them back from the settlers on the land by the disposal of water rights, and using the money over again for reclamation.

President Empowered to Control Philippine Affairs.

Special to the JOURNAL.
WASHINGTON, February 27.—After ten hours of sensational debate the Senate just after midnight passed by a vote of 45 to 27 the Spooner amendment to the Army bill, which gives the President power to control affairs in the Philippines. Jones of Nevada was among those opposing this action.

The vote was almost on party lines, Mr. Hoar being the only Republican voting with the Democrats. After the amendment was adopted the whole bill was finally passed by a similar vote.

Botha Caught but DeWet Escapes.

Special to the JOURNAL.
LONDON, February 27.—An unofficial report has been received here and is generally credited. It says that General Botha and his forces have surrendered to Lord Kitchener. The story is not yet confirmed. General DeWet is still leading his pursuers a merry chase and it is very probable he will escape.

A dozen bodies were recovered from the Diamondville mine yesterday.

tion of a comprehensive plan under which the three features of disposing of this question can be considered—one, the question of the disposition, which the gentleman favors, namely, the cession to the States; another, an appropriation of public funds out of the General Treasury for the conservation of water as a matter of general public improvement, without reference to compensation for this great work; another, simply the bill reported by the Irrigation Committee, which provides that the Government shall do the work in the interest of the entire people, using the moneys received from the sale of the public lands of that region for construction, receiving them back from the settlers on the land by the disposal of water rights, and using the money over again for reclamation.

A bill intended to permit what the gentleman's party calls for in its platform, namely, the holding of these lands for actual settlers and the creation of homes instead of land monopoly in the West. Now, I ask the gentleman whether he will favor, as one of the leaders of the House, the consideration, before Congress adjourns, of these comprehensive plans and measures?

Mr. Cannon.—I will not vote, as I am now informed, to pay by grant from the Federal Treasury for the irrigation of 600,000,000 acres of land.

OFFICIAL ACTION

Has not Yet Been Manifested in the Tenderloin Matter.

Although a week or more has passed since the JOURNAL began its crusade against the ancient and dishonorable order of P. I.'s, there has been no action, as per agreement, on the part of the constabulary.

True, they have other matters to look after, but the JOURNAL questions if they are of greater importance. It is difficult to understand why this paper should not be supported in a matter of such vital interest. Neither citizens nor officers are alleged to be amenable to blame, but the fact remains that nothing has been done by the authorities. Far be it from the motives of this humble newspaper which is honestly striving to purge the moral atmosphere of Reno, to grow indignant and assert that it has been deserted by those who have taken obligations to enforce the laws of the land.

If the JOURNAL crusade should fail, there will be popular indignation expressed that the wound in our body politic was probed, without removing the source of the trouble. It is hoped that the officers will pardon the impatience of the JOURNAL. It is obvious that great bodies move slowly. This fact has been demonstrated in history. However, an acceleration of the movements of the guardians of peace and morality would be hailed with relief and joy.

The officers should realize that in this publication they might have a zealous ally. Should they move in this matter in an earnest, conscientious, fearless manner they may be assured that they will not suffer. There are more honest men than masquerades in Reno and the former will not be sparing in their manifestations of gratitude for excellent offices performed.

There may be more circumverbiage than dead center language in this article, but nevertheless he who runs may read between the lines.

Putting Ginger Into the Paper.

Under the regime of Editor Rutherford the Truckee Republican has always been a first-class paper, but a certain Mr. Miller has gotten hold of it while Rutherford is serving time in the California Assembly.

This man Miller has raised Cain with the Republican. He began by introducing modern headlines; followed it up by burning up the P. I.'s, and now is wreaking wrath on the Reno papers. Even if the JOURNAL hates, loathes and abhors this pugnacious Miller, it admits that he is up-to-date and all right as a newspaper man.

Have You Had Your Palm Read?

Professor Sterling, the palmist, will remain at the Golden Eagle hotel a week longer. His rooms are thronged daily with people who desire his services.

Although the writer is a Doubting Thomas on many of the modern omens, he is forced to admit that Professor Sterling is an unusual man and signally fortunate in his estimates of human character. THE BUNCIL TRIAL

Evidence for the Prosecution Was Adduced Yesterday.

The case of Leo Buncel, charged with arson, is on trial in the District Court. The defendant is alleged to have burned the bottling works connected with the Washoe brewery last September. He is defended by Wren & Julian. District Attorney Pike, assisted by E. L. Williams, is conducting the prosecution.

A jury was quickly obtained. The following witnesses were examined for the State: Dr. Leonard, James Burke, James Bell, Charles Magoon, Prof. Caffrey, George Hoy, Prof. Wilson, Mrs. Bertha Becker, Jerome Bowman, W. D. McNeilly, Surveyor Chalmers and Bert Palmer.

Their testimony was purely circumstantial, but established a chain of evidence. The State rested and adjournment was had to 7 p. m.

Legislative Proceedings.

Little of importance was done in legislative halls yesterday. Speaker Van Duzer addressed the Assembly in behalf of a constitutional addendum providing for State ownership of certain water courses.

Dr. Patterson addressed the Senate respecting appropriations for the State insane asylum, and also in the interest of a proposed bill in relation to the insane which guards against their being railroaded to the asylum.
